I. INTRODUCTION

In mid-December a Low-Pressure Area (LPA) to the east of the Philippines slowly formed which eventually became TY Odette. This cyclone was projected to keep a westward track where it will cross over Visayas and exit the Philippine Area of Responsibility through Kalayaan, Palawan. As it travelled over Visayas, the cyclone had gained enough strength to be categorized into Level 5 typhoon, sustaining winds at around 185Kph at the center and even stronger gusts.

On December 17, 2021, TY Odette has reached its peak strength over Palawan where it brought heavy to torrential rains and maximum wind signals of #3. By this point, most of the municipalities were able to conduct pre-emptive evacuations over their vulnerably exposed population. On the same date as the typhoon crosses over mainland Palawan, all telecommunications disappeared and almost all areas of the province lost power.

Initial reports of damages identified that at least 4 major bridges in Puerto Princesa City leading to the northern municipalities have been heavily damaged and the North Highway has been effectively obstructed by heavy debris. Majority of the southern area of mainland Palawan only suffered power and signal reception outages with minimal to no structural damages. The Response cluster, aerial surveys, and emergency radio communications were the temporary means of gathering reports which identified Roxas to have sustained a massive amount of damage and a number of casualties. Later on, it was also found out that Kalayaan, Araceli, San Vicente, Dumaran and a few areas in Taytay suffered severe damages as well. Further observations also indicate that a few other areas suffered moderate damages such as other parts of Taytay and Apurawan in Aborlan. Further, supplies were also difficult to transport in island municipalities such as Cagayancillo and the Cuyo Islands since the central mainland Palawan took large damage, although they have minimal to no damages in their municipalities.

The Province of Palawan through the Provincial EOC and its response cluster formed an initiative to first repair the damaged bridges and clear the North Highway to restore passage to all northern municipalities. At the same time, the IMT was activated to oversee the clearing operations and establish an alternate means of transport to the north. Alternate communications were also installed within the first week of impact. Relief operations were immediately activated as well with initial assistance first directed to Roxas, Araceli, and Kalayaan for sustaining the most damages. Relief operations are continued to present to provide assistance to all other affected areas.
