Madam:

Warmest greetings!

Life is represented by the color green. It represents nature, health, growth, harmony, and vitality. It is the most calming hue for the human eye. This is the hue of youth. Today, the Liminangcong National High school's Youth for Environment in Schools (YES) Organization will paint the community green, signaling a growing concern for the protection and preservation of the planet's resources. It is evidence that students in schools have organized and sustained their engagement and activity to protect, preserve, conserve, and rehabilitate the environment.

Department of Education (DepEd) Order No. 72, series of 2003, establishes YES-O as the only co-curricular environmental club or organization in schools that consolidates all other environmental and/or ecology clubs or organizations in schools with main and primary program or projects for the environment. This effort is based on the belief that educating children about ecology at a young age helps ensure a clean and healthy environment for future generations. YES-O will inspire and educate youngsters from various perspectives to affect environmental concerns via community action projects and campaigns; skills training in leadership, environmental education, civic participation, and community organizing; and knowledge that will maintain our community and future.
